

Covering business in the DTC & Denver south

the CORRIDORSM.biz

First American State Bank names new president

BY BOB SWEENEY
PUBLISHER

First American State Bank CEO Jay Davidson announced a new president at his locally owned DTC bank. Scott Yeoman has joined the $265 million locally owned bank located in the center of Greenwood Village at 8300 E. Crescent Circle, directly off Bellevue and DTC Boulevard

Davidson received his state banking charter and opened the bank July 10, 1995. The bank has grown to become one of Colorado's leading independent banks with a mission to provide exemplary service to independent business owners, discriminating professionals and high net-worth individuals.

First American provides direct access to decision makers who provide quick answers to financial needs.

Scott grew up in the Midwest and graduated from the University of Iowa with a degree in finance in 1980 and earned an MBA at DePaul University in 1988. He has attended Harvard seminars to advance his extensive banking career. In college, he joined Sigma Chi fraternity.

As a youth, his family would vacation in Colorado and it was his dream to live and work in Colorado. His sister Kay Coryell beat him to the punch moving to Colorado years ago to teach music in Douglas County Schools and now resides in Centennial. Scott relates that they both were in their high school band with him playing the French horn and her the flute. "She was the better musician," he admits.

His first banking job was with American National Bank and Trust Co. in Chicago, a $4.5 billion-dollar bank that evolved into JPMorgan-Chase. He rose rapidly through the ranks to become a second vice president by 1987. His banking career zoomed upward in Chicago, moving to $30 billion asset Continental Bank where he was a team leader providing a broad array of corporate finance services to middle-market public and private companies.

He and his wife Judy took an opportunity to move to Colorado Springs to become the chief executive officer of Farmers & Stockman's Bank in 2006. Farmer's was related to Central Bank & Trust and he led that bank in new growth in Colorado and New Mexico.

He comes to First American State Bank from his position as president of Stockmen's

Scott Yeoman

Bank in Colorado Springs where he was responsible for overall operation of the niche-focused community bank. Scott is excited about joining the locally-focused First American State Bank team headed by Jay Davidson's leadership.

A strong family man, he and Judy have three children with daughter Rachel a Berklee College music student in Boston preparing for a musical career along with songwriting.

His son Rob received a geology degree at Montana State University and is now living and working in Colorado Springs. Son Matthew graduated from Ft. Lewis College in Durango where he obtained a business degree and still lives in the area, loving the outdoors and white-water rafting. The family loves the outdoors and Scott and Judy have spent many days camping and enjoying Colorado's outdoors.

His office is across from First American's awesome teller team and he invites customers to "say hello" as they visit the bank. The bank is open for new business and they have an exciting new team member.

